

Emotional Support

A diagnosis of cancer can cause great emotional upheaval. Many people find they need to talk about their feelings and experiences about having cancer and cancer treatments and the effect on their lives. Many people with cancer find that talking to a professional counsellor can be helpful. Others also find comfort in a cancer support group where they can meet and socialise with people in similar situations, whilst other people find it more helpful to talk to an individual who has had cancer.

Carers of people with cancer may find many of these services helpful. Carers can also check the entries under Services for Carers.

Cancer Support Groups

Cancer support groups offer a safe place for people with cancer to talk with others who have had similar experiences. Support groups may offer emotional, social and some practical support as well as information on cancer and related issues. Each support group is unique in what they provide. To find out more information on a group, or for information on starting and maintaining a self-help support group, contact Cancer Council Helpline 13 11 20.
